

The diagram illustrates the encoding process for four different input patterns. Each pattern is transformed into a sequence of blue blocks (representing features) and black blocks (representing features) through a series of steps. The final output is a sequence of blocks, with the last block being a large black block labeled 'Coding'.

